Dr. Tanenbaum was educated at Bryn Mawr College and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. A political scientist by training, Dr. Tanenbaum has taught US health policy at The Ohio State University for two decades. Her research has focused on health politics, disability policy, and the epistemology of medical care. She has been a core faculty member of Ohio State’s LEND program since its inception. Dr. Tanenbaum is a section co-editor of the Journal of Health Politics, Policy and Law, US regional editor for the Journal of Evaluation in Clinical Practice and serves on the editorial board of the International Journal of Person-Centered Medicine. She is glad to have lived long enough to see (almost) universal health care in the US.

In this talk, Dr. Tanenbaum will review the major features of the Affordable Care Act (ACA) and discuss their likely effects on people with developmental disabilities. Although the ACA primarily expands health insurance coverage for Americans without it, it also introduces changes to the health services delivery system and to the relationship between the state and federal governments. There will be ample time for questions.
