Making plans for college or work after high school can be challenging. LeDerick Horne will discuss the importance of transition to college and/or employment and the strategies that work to support success. He will share his experiences as a person with a disability and the path that has led him to becoming a successful advocate, entrepreneur, playwright, poet and leader of a national mentoring program.

About the Presenter: When he was in the third grade, LeDerick Horne was told he didn’t have much of a future. However, despite being classified as a student with significant learning disabilities, Horne has spent much of his life defying labels. He has become nationally renowned for his numerous accomplishments, including social advocacy and education.
