Please Join Us:
Friday, March 27, 2015
12 – 1 PM
230 McCampbell Hall

Featured Presenters:
Jen Wong, PhD, is an assistant professor in the Department of Human Sciences at Ohio State University. Dr. Wong received her PhD in Human Development and Family Studies from Pennsylvania State University. Her program of research focuses on two areas: normative and non-normative transitions and processes in midlife. The first area of research investigates the factors that shape employment transitions and processes, and the influences of such transitions and processes on daily psychological well-being and health in midlife. The second research area examines the impacts of parenting an adolescent or adult with a disability in midlife on well-being and health. Dr. Wong’s current work integrates these two areas of research by examining how non-normative parenting affects employment processes, and the subsequent influences on well-being and health.